The Master of Policy Management program strikes a balance between analytics, management, and policy substance, giving students a comprehensive education in policy management.

Students develop vital skills in collaboration, critical thinking, economic analysis, ethical leadership, and policy analysis. Graduates of the program are able to specify policy problems by integrating analytics, management, and advocacy considerations.

Academic Policies

The academic policies and procedures of the Policy Management program are those specified in Georgetown's University Bulletin.

Total Credits		36

¹ Four summer institutes, the foundation of the MPM program, are offered in week-long sessions during the summer term.

² MPM students expand on the analytical skills they attain in their core coursework and summer institutes with 15 credits of elective courses. Students have an array of elective courses from which to choose at the McCourt School and Georgetown University's other top-ranked graduate schools. Our expert faculty teach a wide range of elective courses in today's most relevant policy areas and methods.

Many McCourt School students choose to align their elective coursework with their interests and career goals. While not required, students may choose to focus their elective coursework in a particular area of study like Management & Leadership, Political Strategy & Governance, or Homeland Security Policy.
